The Race Question in the South. In The Forum for October are presented two rather gloomy pictures of the race question in the South, one by Bishop Haygood, and the other by "Bill Arp" (Charles N. Smith). While both declare themselves hostile to the criminal jurisprudence administered in the Courts of "Judge Lynch," they both resort to the familiar pleas that have been offered in excuse for it. In the opinion of these writers the generation of negroes that has grown up in the South since the w r compare very disadvantageously with its predecessor. Both writers maintain that the negro of to-day is dishonest, lazy, criminal, and, when in the presence of the weak, brutal. A zealous church-goer, he has not the faintest conception of Christian teachings. Most of the southern ne-groes are Methodists or Baptists, and all believe themselves sure of eternal salvation. Repentance and remorse are strangers to them. Not one has any fear of punishment after death not even the common nurderer on the gallows. He is assured that he belongs to the chosen band of which his preacher speaks. While the colored population of the South constitutes a very considerable constitutes a very considerable. able percentage of its criminals, this phenomenon is not attributed by these writers to a want of common-school ed-FOR SALE BY E.S. LEADBEATER & SONS ucation. Of the inmates of the prisons of Georgia 2,209 are negroes, of whom 40 per cent, can read and write. The same number are church members, and 60 per cent, are under 30 years of age. Yet the colored people have their full share of the school fund of the State, and there are more than 2,000 colored teachers, without counting the colleges and higher schools. It is asserted by both writers that the It is asserted by both writers that the relations of the races in the South are becoming more strained from year to year. Where the negroes are in the majority they are insolent toward the whites. In the rural districts, where the whites are sparsely settled, they cannot protect themselves from the negroes. It is impossible to maintain schools for white children there and schools for white children there, and those whites who can do so withdraw to the towns and leave the negroes in possession of the lands. Such, in brief outline, is the picture drawn in these two articles. If it be correct, it shows that the negroes of the South have fearfully degenerated in a condition of freedom. During the civil war, when nearly all the able-bodied men of the South were in the army, the women and children were left on the plantations in care of the slaves. In that period few instances of violence or outrage on the part of the blacks were recorded. Southern planters have cheerfully borne testimony to their great fidelity and kindness of disposition in that crisis. It is almost impossible, therefore, to believe that their nature has undergone such a change under the must be provided for this condition of things, else outrages will increase and end in a war of races. But they are not in harmony as to the methods of relief. "Bill Arp" intimates that too much is done for the negroes; that the numerous schools are demoralizing to them, and that stern laws and represencourage the generous people of the North who spend large sums of money to educate the southern negroes. Bish-op Haygood, on the other hand, seeks aid in a better education, especially in rearing capable teachers and preachers of the colored race. He asks for help from the North, and he does not hesi-tate to rebuke the spirit that becomes PLASTER.

The two writers represent respectively the views that prevail in the South in regard to the race issue. Bishop Haygood's position is that which more rightly accords with reason and humanity. But there is a better reason than either, which treats the negroes as men endowed with equal rights without regard to the accident of color. This is the view of com-mon sense and of the American constitution; and if enforced in its true spirit the race troubles would be mitigated, if they should 10° wholly disappear.
